

IMAGINE YOUR OWN WORLD

PART 1 Your character needs a place to live and have adventures! In stories, the setting can be anything from a rabbit burrow to a large country. In D&D, the storytelling takes place in a fantasy world filled with mystical locations and creatures. For example, there's Stormwreck Isle, a small island occupied by two families of dragons who have been fighting each other for centuries. Read the backstory and description of Stormwreck Isle opposite.

Now, create an island next to Stormwreck Isle that has a very small population. This is the setting where YOUR story will take place.

On the back of the activity sheet, sketch out the island and include the features listed below:

- island name
- a cove, lake, or other body of water
- a tall geographical feature
- a monster's lair
- a place of safety

PART 2 Divide the island features you have mapped among the members of your team and create a backstory for each one, explaining its significance on the island. How did the item form? Is it natural or did someone build it? How big or deep is it? What does it look like? Why is it there? Write your backstories on separate paper.

Remember to work as a team and let your imagination soar. There's no right or wrong way to tell the story. It's your team's story. Have fun!

ABOUT STORMWRECK ISLE

Legend has it that centuries ago, there lived two dragon families. The metallic dragons—gold, silver, bronze, brass, and copper—were made by a dragon named Bahamut. The other dragons were called the chromatic dragons, and they were red, blue, green, black and white. They were made by a dragon named Tiamat. Tiamat and Bahamut did not get along, so the dragons were always feuding, or fighting each other.

According to the legend, Stormwreck Isle was formed when the metallic dragons captured a fire-breathing red dragon named Sharruth and trapped her beneath the ocean floor. Her fury caused undersea volcanic activity that formed Stormwreck Isle. As a result, there is magic on the island that has drawn other dragons there ever since and the feuds continue.

Most believe that Sharruth died, but rumors persist that she is still raging far beneath the island. Others that live on the island include shipwrecked sailors, small strange reptiles called kobolds, mushroom-like people called myconids, and other mysterious and hostile creatures.
